BRIEF

In the fall of 2009, Campbell Law School will make history when it relocates from the main Campbell University campus in Buies Creek to its new home at 225 Hillsborough Street in downtown Raleigh.

The future is bright at Campbell Law School. Thank you for being a critical voice in the life of Campbell Law as the Law School approaches outside funders.

The anticipation about this new phase in the life of Campbell Law has garnered extensive media coverage, opened new doors for internships at Raleigh area law firms and other organizations, and allowed innovative community service projects and legal clinics to develop. Applications for the 2009-10 academic year from prospective students are up 50 percent from this same time in 2007.

Lead gifts set tone for 'Campaign for Raleigh'

It was in October 2007 that Campbell University announced that it would relocate the Law School from its main campus to downtown Raleigh. A 40-member cabinet, chaired by Frank B. Holding, Jr., President & CEO of First Citizens Bank, was quickly formed to help spearhead the campaign.

To date, more than $4 million has been committed to the $27.5 million campaign goal. Individuals and organizations that have provided lead gift commitments of more than $5,000 to the campaign include:

“We are extraordinarily grateful for the early commitments to the campaign,” said Dean Melissa Essary. “Having the support of our graduates and new friends in the Raleigh community is what will make this move a success. We have much to do, but Campbell Law School has already reached new heights during the early months of the campaign.”

Year-end giving opportunities

As the end of 2008 approaches, please consider supporting the Law School with a contribution to the Campaign for Raleigh, annual fund, endowed scholarship or other designation. A response form and envelope are enclosed for your review and use.

As you consider what you might do to support your Law School, please remember that every Campbell Law School student has benefited from the generosity of others, be it through financial support, mentoring, instruction, and prayers and encouragement.

Consider the following:

- The Law School only has two sources of revenue—tuition and charitable gifts
- Every gift provides something that the Law School would not have otherwise
- All contributions are critical to the Law School’s success
- Every dollar contributed to the Law School stays within the Law School
- Alumni contributions—regardless of the size of the gift—are extremely important as the Law School approaches outside funders
- Contributions are, of course, tax deductible

The future is bright at Campbell Law School. Thank you for being a torchbearer.

Expectations are indeed high for Campbell Law’s transition to Raleigh. In this issue of the Campbell Law Brief we will share some key information about the Campaign for Raleigh, including details about early lead gifts, naming opportunities and floor plans for the new facility.

Please enjoy getting to learn more about Campbell Law’s new home and the efforts of our alumni and friends to make this project a reality. If you have questions or would like to learn more about getting involved with this historic campaign, please do not hesitate to contact me or another member of the Campbell Law team.

"Beyond the walls of the Law School’s new home in Raleigh, the city itself will be a classroom to our students through unlimited opportunities for internships and pro bono work in law firms, courts at all levels, government and nonprofit agencies, and other organizations.

We will have significant opportunities to tangibly represent Campbell’s core values through service to others. Instilling the Law School’s Judeo-Christian values and emphasis on service in the downtown Raleigh community will be critical to demonstrating Campbell’s distinctive approach to legal education.”

Nailing opportunities at all levels abound

A number of premier naming opportunities remain available in the new Law School building—including classrooms, courtrooms, faculty offices and many other premier spaces. More affordable opportunities are also available.

New Law School will be world-class facility

Designed by the prestigious Boston architectural firm, Shepley Bulfinch Richardson & Abbott with support from the Raleigh architectural firm of Small Kane, Campbell Law School’s new home will be eco-friendly. Spread across four floors, the new location will increase the size of Campbell Law School’s overall facility space from 74,000 square feet to over 109,000 square feet, an increase of more than forty-one percent. The increased space will allow room for measured, thoughtful growth among faculty and students, while maintaining Campbell’s intimate, personal class sizes.

First Floor – The public floor

The first floor of the Law School will include functions that are externally focused, including office suites for student admissions, career services, alumni relations, development and communications.

Along with the first floor of the law library, this floor will also include a grand reception hall, chapel, and a 200-seat auditorium that will serve as a classroom and public event space. An attorney resource room will be located in the library for use by practicing members of the bar.

The primary entrance to the building will be in the pavilion area.

Second Floor – The student floor

The second floor of the Law School will house offices and facilities that will be heavily oriented to student use, including the main floor of the law library, a large student commons area for studying and socialization, coffee shop and café, student government and club space, and technical services.

The state-of-the-art law library will contain latest digital and print resources, ample individual study areas and a dozen group study rooms.

Student lockers, mailboxes and other conveniences will also be located on the second floor.
Third Floor – The academic floor

The third floor of the Law School will include eight of the facility’s 13 classrooms, and three courtrooms. Classrooms will range from 25-person seminar rooms to 110-person lecture style rooms.

All classrooms will feature the latest in instructional and learning technology. Courtrooms will allow Campbell Law students to hone their skills in the practice of trial advocacy and preparation for courtroom work.

The Goodmon Legal Clinic will also be housed on the third floor, along with an expanded legal writing center.

Fourth Floor – The administrative floor

The fourth floor will house the Dean’s suite, faculty offices, and key administrative offices for the registrar and IT.

There will be ample room for strategic faculty growth in years to come. Plans also call for the fourth floor to house five classrooms, including at least three 25-person seminar rooms and two 40-person classrooms.

Troutman Sanders provides major law firm gift

Campbell Law School has announced that the law firm of Troutman Sanders has committed $50,000 to the Campaign for Raleigh. This is the largest law firm gift to date received by the law school and another major step in the $27.5 million capital campaign.

Ashley Story, ’82, managing partner of Troutman Sanders’ Raleigh office, spearheaded the firm’s support for the Campaign for Raleigh. Hannah Styron, ’02 and Martin Varf, ’04, associates at Troutman Sanders, along with Story and the firm will collectively fulfill the commitment.

Law student awarded N.C. Bar pro bono award

Gigi Gardner, a third year law student at Campbell, has been awarded the North Carolina State Bar’s 2008 Student Pro Bono Service Award.

Gardner was honored at the State Bar’s 50-Year Lawyers’ Luncheon, on Thursday, Oct. 23 at the Sheraton Capital Center Hotel in Raleigh. Campbell Law Dean, Melissa Essary, also attended.

N.C. Court of Appeals hears arguments on campus

Three members of the North Carolina Court of Appeals returned home to their alma mater, Campbell Law School, on Oct. 30 for a special session of court on the Law School’s campus.

Judges John Tyson (’79), Ann Marie Calabria (’93) and Donna Stroud (’88) heard two criminal arguments in the Jefferson-Pilot Courtroom, which was filled with students, faculty and members of the legal community.

The event marked the first time a panel of judges from the N.C. Court of Appeals who are all graduates of Campbell Law School have held court on the Campbell University campus.

Adjunct professor honored by Wake County Bar

Sidney S. Eagles, Campbell Law’s longest serving adjunct professor and an attorney with Smith Moore Leatherwood in Raleigh, has been awarded the 2008 Joseph Branch Professionalism Award by the Wake County Bar Association. The award recognizes the Wake County attorney who best exhibits the qualities of professionalism displayed by Joseph Branch, former chief justice of the N.C. Supreme Court.

Eagles is a former chief judge of the N.C. Court of Appeals. He served on the appellate bench for 21 years and has been a member of Smith Moore Leatherwood’s appellate litigation practice since 2004. He has served as an adjunct professor at Campbell Law School since the School opened in 1976. Eagles is teaching North Carolina Criminal Procedure at Campbell during the 2008-09 academic year.

Campbell Law partners with NCSHCA

Campbell Law School served as Platinum Level sponsor of the North Carolina Society of Healthcare Attorneys (NCSHCA) 2008 annual meeting held Oct. 3 at the N.C. Museum of Art in Raleigh. More than 90 healthcare attorneys and professionals from across North Carolina attended the annual meeting along with seven Campbell Law School students and two members of the faculty and staff. Kenneth L. Burgess (’84) of the law firm of Poyner & Spruill was the planner of the 2008 event. Burgess was also elected as President of the NCSHCA during the annual meeting business session.

Using funds from a medical jurisprudence speakership endowment created by long-time Raleigh healthcare attorney, Edward Hallowell, Campbell Law sponsored the annual meeting’s keynote speaker, New Orleans attorney Jim Cobb.

Cobb is known for successfully defending Mabel and Sal Mangano, owners of St. Rita’s Nursing Home in New Orleans, following Hurricane Katrina.

Professor Buzzard releases new book

Professor Lynn Buzzard has written a new book entitled, Dry Bones, Flying Chariots & Edible Scrolls. Buzzard’s latest book delves into the Biblical figure of Ezekiel. His desire in writing the book was to take his love for Ezekiel and make the story more readable.

“Ezekiel is one of the most unique characters in the Bible,” said Buzzard, “but for most people it’s an obscure book. Most people know absolutely nothing about him.”

The book’s recent release could not have been better timed. Buzzard said he was intrigued at what Ezekiel’s visions had to say to people who wanted to hear from God in a time of chaos. “I didn’t know we were going to have an economic crisis when I was writing it,” he said.

Alumni in service: Perry Safran (’81)

For the past 33 years, Perry Safran has seen and been a part of the changing face of the construction industry in North Carolina and beyond. A 1981 graduate of Campbell Law School, Safran received his undergraduate degree from North Carolina State University and his MBA from Wake Forest University.

While Safran has focused his legal career in the construction industry, his business savvy earned him positions on the Raleigh City Council, North Carolina Turnpike Authority and Centennial Authority, where as vice chair Safran played a key role in the construction and continued maintenance of Raleigh’s RBC Center. Safran also served two terms on the N.C. State’s College of Humanities and Social Sciences’ Board of Advisors.

Safran was also an integral player in setting the stage for the law school to make a successful transition from Buies Creek to downtown Raleigh. “The advice and introductions that Perry made for the Law School were invaluable,” said Dean Melissa Essary. “His loyalty and guidance to Campbell, and to me personally, cannot be overstated.”

As part of the Campaign for Raleigh, Perry and Susan Safran have generously issued a $250,000 challenge to the law school class of 1981. Members of the class of 1981 will receive additional details soon.
